Prada's Fall/Winter Show Has Landed on Earth, and It's Weird.

Suits with major space villain vibes. Yup.

Raf Simmons and Miuccia Prada worked together to create this Fall/Winter collection with the intention of making the wearer feel important and empowered. The eye-catching collection debuted in Milan Fashion Week, featuring their models exiting a futuristic tunnel and following a yellow beam. Everything about this show screamed alien invasion! Prada pulled a complete 180 from their last Fall/Winter show. The brand went from sleek boxy silhouettes to top heavy hourglass, and it is certainly working for them.

Miuccia told WWD: “The collection celebrates the idea of working — in all different spheres and meanings,” Prada said. “It is a practical, everyday thing. But here, you are formally important. You are not casual. And through these clothes, we emphasize that everything a human being does is important. Every aspect of reality can be elegant and dignified.” The two used traditional double-breasted coats but added accentuated waistlines, used crazy colors, add unique textures and broad shoulders to add individuality and creativity to the men’s suits. While Prada says they are aiming for a bold new office look, we can envision Dr. Evil wearing some of these looks.
